I, Ryan Henderson, am a general partner and portfolio manager at Arch Capital. Together, Brett and I manage our investments and are solely responsible for all capital allocation.

I got my start in investing when Brett and I launched Chit Chat Money in our early years at Washington State University. Now a top 100 global investing podcast, Chit Chat Money and our listeners serve as a valuable community where we can share and vet various investment opportunities and ideas.

Chit Chat Money also affords me access to some of the best fund managers, investment analysts, and business operators around the world. These relationships have largely crafted my investment philosophy and helped shape my understanding of security analysis.

During the summer of 2020 I worked as an investing intern at The Motley Fool under various individuals who I consider role models. For two months The Motley Fool put me through a string of investment courses taught by some of the brightest business and security analysts I've ever encountered.

Brett and I met as kickers on the Washington State football team in 2017 and we've carried that knack for precision into our investment approach. We are meticulous in our business assessments and we skew towards risk aversion whenever possible.
